

SALT, From A1

It was learned that the major points of the American proposal are as follows:

• Two anti-ballistic missile installations for each country with 100 launchers at each site. One installation would protect an intercontinental ballistic missile complex and the other would be deployed around what is known as the National Command Authority, Moscow and Washington. The proposal thus provides for "symmetry," which the Soviets have been demanding.

• The Soviet Union has an ABM installation around Moscow but none around a missile site. The United States has none around Washington but is building an ABM complex around a Minuteman site at Grand Forks, N.D.

The U.S. proposal also specifies a freeze at current levels on the modern large ballistic missiles in the Soviet arsenal. These include the 208 giant SS-9s and 25 additional super missiles now believed to be under construction for 25 new silos that have been prepared. The number of these super-missiles would, according to the U.S. proposal, be limited to 313.

• A freeze on land-based intercontinental ballistic missiles built or under construction when the agreement is signed. According to the Defense Department's posture statement in February, the United States had 1,054 land-based intercontinental ballistic missile launchers and the Soviet Union was expected to have 1,550.

• A freeze on submarine-based offensive missiles at present levels, including those already built or under construction. The United States has had 41 missile subs in its fleet for several years. The Soviets have 25 operational subs with 17 more under construction for a total of 42.

• A provision for some freedom for each country to change the mix of its land and sea-based missiles. The proposal suggests a complicated formula, but essentially it would allow each country to retire some launchers and replace them with others, even shifting between land and sea-based missiles. Both countries must, however, remain within the overall limit on the number of launchers. A small missile could not be exchanged for a super-missile, however.

The proposal would allow for modernization of the arsenals of both countries.

At the time of signature, the proposed agreement would ratify Soviet superiority in the number of missile launchers but not in the number of warheads. According to the Defense Department's posture statement, by mid-1972 the Soviet Union was expected to have 2,500 individual warheads compared with 5,700 for the United States.

The agreement would allow the Soviets to close the warhead gap but would not allow the United States to close the launcher gap.

The United States is now bolstering its warhead arsenal by adding MIRVs (multiple independently targeted reentry vehicles) to existing Minutemen and submarine launchers. The United States plans to fit multiple warheads on 550 of its 1,000 Minutemen. So far, it has completed work on 150 of these. The Polaris missile can carry 10 to 14 warheads, and each U.S. missile-firing submarine can carry 16 launchers.

Poll Finds 7 of 10 Support Nixon On the Bombing of North Vietnam

A telephone poll taken following President Nixon's Vietnam speech a week ago showed that seven out of 10 Americans questioned supported his decision to bomb North Vietnam as long as it continued its offensive in South Vietnam.

The Opinion Research Corp. of Princeton, N.J., reported that telephone interviews with 1,024 persons in a nationwide sample conducted April 27-29 showed that from 66 per cent to 86 per cent agreed with various excerpts from the President's speech.

The poll showed that 69 per cent of those questioned agreed with Mr. Nixon's statement that "our air and naval attacks on military installations in North Vietnam will be continued until the North Vietnamese stop their offensive in South Vietnam." The poll showed that 24 per cent of those questioned disagreed and that 7 per cent had no opinion.

The largest support—86 per cent of those interviewed—was shown for Mr. Nixon's statement calling for an end to the war "in such a way that the younger brothers and sons of the brave men who have fought... will not have to fight again in some other Vietnam at some time in the future." The poll showed 11 per cent disagreed with this statement and 3 per cent had no opinion.

However, only 69 per cent of those questioned said they agreed with his statement: "We will not be defeated and we will never surrender." The poll listed 23 per cent disagreement and 8 per cent with no opinion on this part of the speech.

D.C. Tass Office Is Smokebombed

Two young men yesterday threw a homemade smoke bomb into the National Press-Building offices of Tass, the Soviet news service, causing minor smoke damage and forcing the temporary evacuation of the building's second-floor occupants.

Two Soviet correspondents inside the office, Vitaly Gan and Ludmila Chukseva, were not injured.

An unidentified man called The Washington Post and the UPI office here moments after the 10:30 a.m. incident, announcing the bomb was in retaliation for "the beating of Moscow Jews... by Soviet police on Saturday."

A spokesman for the Washington JDL chapter later denied responsibility for the bombing, but said, "We cannot exclude the possibility that some of our members did it."
